The shapes come in families. The four triangles are the noun family: the big black noun, the small light blue article in front of it, the medium dark blue adjective that describes it, and the tall purple pronoun that stands in its place. The two circles are the verb family: the large red verb and the smaller orange adverb that tells you how. The green crescent (preposition) is a bridge between words, the pink bar (conjunction) ties words together, and the gold keystone (interjection) is a cry on its own.
