The Garden in a Box

134 words

Priya's apartment had no yard, but it had one sunny window. For her seventh birthday, her uncle gave her a long wooden box filled with dirt. "It is a garden," he said. Priya was not sure. It looked like a box of mud. Together they pressed seeds into the dirt: three tomato seeds, a row of beans and a pinch of tiny lettuce seeds. Every morning Priya watered the box before school. For a whole week nothing happened. Then one morning she saw two pale green loops pushing up through the dirt. The beans had sprouted! By June the tomato plants were taller than the box. Priya picked her first tomato on the last day of school. It was warm from the sun and tasted like summer. Now she understood what her uncle meant.
