MEET THE ARTIST

Georgia O'Keeffe was born on a farm in Wisconsin, in the United States, in 1887. She decided to be an artist when she was only twelve. In the 1920s she lived in New York and painted its new skyscrapers, but she became famous for her flowers. She noticed that people hurry past small things, so she painted a single flower so large that it filled the whole canvas, and viewers had to stop and look. Later she fell in love with the desert of New Mexico. She painted its red hills, its bright sky and the bleached animal bones she collected on her walks, and in 1949 she moved there for good. She kept painting into her nineties and died in 1986, aged 98. Many people call her the mother of American modern art.

1. Where and when was Georgia O'Keeffe born?

2. What did she paint while she lived in New York?

3. Why did she paint flowers so large?

4. Name three things she painted in New Mexico.

5. How old was she when she died, and what do many people call her?

YOUR TURN

Paint like O'Keeffe: choose one flower, look very closely and draw it so big that its petals run off every edge of the box. Use smooth blended colour and no outlines.
