Theo spent every August with his grandmother, Nana Ruth, who kept the lighthouse on Gull Rock. One evening in late summer, thick fog rolled in from the sea. Nana Ruth climbed the spiral stairs to switch on the great lamp, but nothing happened. The bulb had blown, and the spare was broken too.

"The Marigold is still out there," she said, looking at the fishing boat's empty mooring. "Without the light, Captain Dale will never find the harbour."

Theo thought hard. In the storeroom he had seen a row of old brass lanterns and a stack of mirrors from the days before electricity. He ran down, grabbed three lanterns and a mirror, and hurried back up, panting. Nana Ruth lit the lanterns while Theo propped the mirror behind them. The little flames doubled in the glass and threw a soft golden beam into the fog.

They waited. At last a horn sounded, two long blasts, and the Marigold slid safely past the rocks. Captain Dale waved from the deck.

"That was clever thinking," said Nana Ruth. Theo grinned. He had never felt so proud of an old lantern.

THE LANTERN ON GULL ROCK: STORY MAP

ANSWER KEY

Name: ..... Date: .....

Characters: Theo, Nana Ruth, Captain Dale. Setting: the lighthouse on Gull Rock, a foggy evening in late summer. Problem: the lighthouse lamp fails while the Marigold is still at sea. Event 1: the bulb blows and the spare is broken. Event 2: Theo fetches the old lanterns and a mirror from the storeroom. Event 3: they light the lanterns, the mirror doubles the beam, and the Marigold sails safely past the rocks. Solution: the lanterns and mirror make a light strong enough to guide the boat home. Theme: quick, clever thinking (and old things) can solve a problem; accept "do not give up".
